

“When the well is dry, we learn the worth of water”

Benjamin Franklin

Water, more than any other natural resource, challenges Texas’ future. The successful management of water and wastewater utilities has many facets - operational, environmental, financial, and regulatory factors must all be taken into consideration. Municipalities have added obligations that must be understood on the part of local leaders and utility management.

The OFFICE OF RURAL COMMUNITY AFFAIRS, in coordination with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is proud to offer a training session specifically suited to meet the needs of local leaders on water-related issues in the state of Texas – an innovative approach to managing your water utility – customized to meet the needs of rural communities.

Training Topics Include:

General Management • Financial Management • General Operations
• Water Supply and Resources • Regulatory Issues
